

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A hip prosthesis includes a shaft which is configured to be anchored in the medullary canal of a femur and whose distal portion, which is to be anchored in the diaphysis, has a core cross-section which tapers toward the distal end and which, at least on the lateral side and medial side, has longitudinal ribs whose height increases from proximal to distal.